

Inaugural Lecture—Professor Alex Trompetas

Tuesday, 27 February 2018 | 6pm | Conference Room, Block A, Medical School

The University of Nicosia Medical School invites you to the Inaugural Lecture to be delivered by Alex Trompetas, Professor of General Practice

MEDICAL RECORDS | FROM POOR PERFORMANCE INDICATOR TO A SUCCESSFUL WORKPLACE BASED ASSESSMENT

The importance of keeping good medical records was recognised a long time ago. In primary care there has been a sea change in the expectations of what medical records should now include. A number of factors have meant that the amount of detail and the descriptive nature of what the records contain has increased. The most important qualitative difference is the demand for more and more reflective entries where doctors (and other health professionals) explain in the medical record their thought process and their decision-making.

The rise of the reflective nature of the medical records has become useful in the assessment of medical performance. This ranges from the detection of poor performance to the development of tools for the summative assessment of primary care physicians such as the workplace based assessment (WPBA).

Associate Professor Ourania Kolokotroni, Course Director for the MSc in Family Medicine will preside.
Refreshments will be served following the lecture.

UNIVERSITY of NICOSIA | MEDICAL SCHOOL

RSVP by Friday, 23 February 2018 @ 22-471900 or by clicking here