Objectives of the Course:

The aim of this course is to study how rival ways of knowing about political and international issues have developed historically, as well as how these rival ways are currently employed in theory and practice. It introduces students into the philosophy (ancient Greek, Medieval and Enlightenment) that inspired novel and competing interpretations of society, polity and humanity, disseminating different understandings about what is at stake in organizing collectively and relating internationally. It seeks to develop into students an appreciation of the complexity of ways of knowing about political and international affairs and examines what forms of empowerment or social exclusion do specific ways of knowing legitimate within particular theoretical schemes and political projects.

Learning Outcomes:

After completion of the course students are expected to be able to:

1. Illustrate a comprehension of the main ontological and epistemological assumptions surrounding politics and international relations.
2. Analyse and evaluate theoretical claims about politics and international relations.
3. Demonstrate skills in understanding the logics and contradictions of global politics and in interpreting practices of inclusion and exclusion.
4. Illustrate a full understanding of the complexity of the field of study and its relation to other subjects.
5. Demonstrate oral and written communication skills in the formulation of conceptual problems.
6. Demonstrate extensive knowledge of the research methods used in the field of International Relations and the Social Sciences.
