Course Objectives:

The ongoing global financial crisis, and especially the European debt crisis, is not only an issue of financial interest, but it is also an issue of particular legal concern. The regulatory framework for the organization of E.U. financial institutions has been considered one of the contributing factors to the magnitude of the crises, leading several of the European economies into recession. The need therefore arises for a new and improved legislative framework and market supervision, coupled with new initiative for a more competitive and transparent financial sector at a European and Member State level. With these observations in mind, this course on Financial Law aims at a broad, combined, and comprehensive study of the now developing and shaping legislative framework for the organization, activity, functioning, and supervision of financial institutions in the European Union. In particular, the goal of this course is to highlight substantial and trending issues and problems concerning the entire spectrum of Financial Law. Students will be made knowledgeable of international and European developments of this area of law, both from a theoretical (and interdisciplinary) and from a practical (legal) viewpoint.

Learning Outcomes:

After completion of the course students are expected to:

- Covered a broad spectrum of the different aspects of Finance & Credit Law and will develop a correct and methodical way of researching the European sources of this area of the law.

- Developed a well-structured research orientation concerning the study of primary and secondary resources of this area of the law.
- Worked on an individual and collective basis, and developed their personal opinion as to the effectiveness of the developing mechanism for supervision of E.U. financial institutions.
- Developed the necessary skills for evaluating arguments and proposals concerning this area of the law.
- Become acquainted with the need for providing direct, specialized and well-substantiated legal opinions in a number of problems of Finance & Credit Law.
